The Old and the New Year.

Bush for a moment! while the knell Of the past year tolls gravely on; And yet we loved him not too well, To sit and grieve that he is gone-For kinder far the next shall be ; Come talk we of the bloomy spring,

And summer's rich maturity, And autumn's golden harvesting And shout aloud, "Thou 'rt welcome here. O good New Year-O bright New Year !"

To all beside the Christmas fire, With hands to give and hearts to feel-The busy wouth, the weary sire. Who one short hour from labor steal : The mother, 'mid the noisiest glee, Who whispers up a yearning prayer

For the bivthe cherub on her knee, Whom Heaven in after days may spare-Here let us drink with hearty cheer, "A glad New Year-a blest New Year !"

Joy to ye all-Ha ! in the door What pale and mournful shadows stand? Why cross they not the threshold floor, To join, as . nce, our merry band ? "Our churchyard beds are dark and chill, And forth we come through wind and rain,

To meet you all, (we love you still,) And hear our ancient songs again !" Alas ! alas !--but ye were dear---0 sad New Year-O forn New Year! Come join us at the well known feast-The board is spread, the fire beams high! And thought ye that our love had ceased,

Because among the dust ye lie? Brave friends! whose smiles could throw a light O'er darkest hours of change and gloom, O welcome are ye here to-night, Though from the place of graves ve come We trust you still-we feel you near,

To bless for us the New-born Year ! O give to us the tongues of fire, Wherewith ye melted hearts of men! You had the mastery of the lyre-And shall we hear no song again? O tell us how your course was striven

Through the grim cares which round us dwell? O tell us that your home is heaven, That we may bear our burdens well ; And give us strength and manly cheer To arm us through the long New Year!

Ay-have they passed?-in all our mirth Thus graver thoughts must always share ; And thus our brightest thoughts have birth 'Mid dim regrets for joys that were, With smiles for golden days to come, And tears for friends forever gone, twist the cradle and the tomb. Poor pilgrims thus we journey on, But sudness shall not linger here-Drink, then, true hearts, A BLYTHS NEW YEAR!

From the Boston Courier. What the Old Year Said.

Eighteen Hundred and Fifty-nine lingered on Saturday night in the high belfrey of the church in Hanover street; for, being a wily old fellow who has seen the world, he knew that the clock there, like many other things that go " on tick," was sure to be behind time, and he would thus gain five minutes before he stepped into the past. As he looked out over the snow beleagured town he spoke.

And this was what he said : "I'm not sorry to leave you; for I've had a hard time with you. I came among you, a fresh and mer-ry child. I found many of you asleep in warm beds, many trying to sleep in beds not so warm, a few of you with no beds at all. By many my advent was hailed with boisterous glee; but this was probably born of the beverage in which you drank my health. You greeted me loudly, and then by daylight began to growl about the weather I brought; some of you have growled about the weather on each of my three hundred and sixty-five days. There was no such thing as suiting you; and, to tell the truth, I never eared much whether you were suited or not. When I first came I had a good stock of faith in human namen of New York, following the ancient custom, ture, was disposed to deal very gently with your faults and to make much of your excellencies. But you abused me from the beginning to the end, and now I don't wonder that you are glad to turn your back on one you have so much injured. What a quantity of humbug I have seen, to be sure! Why, on the first day of my course it was rampant. Everybody called out, one to the other, 'Wish you a happy New Year,' and then went directly to work to renler happiness an impossibility for all parties. A led B into temptation, B cheated C, C slandered D, and the whole alphabet wrapped themselves in a thick mantle of selfishness, became social hedgehogs, with a head rarely visible and never attractive. I vow, I couldn't help laughing, child as I was, when on the 'New Year's Day' I saw the small parties of nice young men making calls-not because they liked to do so, nor that they enjoyed the business, nor because they had anything to say, nor because they really wanted to see anybody, but because the nice young made calls on that day, and it was thought to be the thing. That which in the metropolis was a natural and a graceful amusement—graceful early in the day, I meau-and in which a certain measure of real illarious enjoyment was to be found, became here to you a solemn performance, dull even if original, and atterly rayless as an imitation. Gracious! How my weather was used up in the talk of that day and those tails. There was a spice of scandal, certainly, but even that had not its usual zest; for everybody was seting a part, and none were yet quite easy in the words. There indeed seemed to be some exceptions to the general dullness; as, for instance, I over-heard little Jane Threadneedle say to her sister Bell : * How funny Mr. Chandelles was! He kept laughing all the time, and made up the queerest faces." ferred to a young man who had just left the drawing mom, gyrating somewhat, and a little shaky with his polysyllables. It was rather late in the day, to be sure, and Bella merely said, 'Hush, child.' I soon found, however, that this humbug wasn't confined to the first day of my reign; that it ran through all your social life. I saw a small country called society, surrounded by a high wall, and entered by a narrow gate. On one side of the gate was a crowd of people striving with their might to keep it shut, giving very little heed to the cultivation of the pastures the wall enclosed. On the other there was a second crowd pushing as vigorously to force open the door; and they, too, neglected their own fields, turned coldly away from their pleasant running brooks. Now and hen, one in gay apparel, bringing a heavy bag to bear upon the gate, would be unwillingly admitted; this one would wander about for a time alone in so- Importer and Dealer in Hannwane, Cutlent, Machanics' ciety; then would become part of it, and would join more zealously than any in the throng who pushed from within to close the gate. I found Mrs. Grundy among you in great force. She has had you all un- Commission Merchants-Fire-Proof Buildings, Queen stre der her foot, and none of you dare even to buy a new hat or muff till she has been consulted. The young men among you dare not marry, because they cannot afford it, they say. Stuff! It is because Mrs. G. The young men are bad enough about this; but the young omen are worse. Disinterested affection ! Oh, yes! N.
